Biographical Sketch:

James Lee is the undergraduate dean and department chair of natural and applied sciences at Cambridge College, and is co-founder and head instructor of the Cambridge College Karate Club. He began training in Tabata-Ha Shotokan karate at age ten, and later served as senpai and team captain under Master Shigeru Takashina at the University of Miami. His passion for strengthening communities through education has led him around the world; teaching and conducting research in Asia, Europe, South America, and the Caribbean. James holds a bachelor's degree in communications from the University of Miami, a master's in natural sciences from Harvard, and a doctorate in education from Northeastern University.
